

FREE DOWNLOAD

THE TRAVEL HACKERS GUIDE TO FREE FLIGHTS

Or: How I Learned To Stop Paying Full Price
And Love The Lounge

For people who passed
7th-grade math and refuse to pay $800 for a domestic flight like a chump.

CardSnark

*Rewards that actually exist,
not marketing
fantasies*

JJ

The Travel Hackers Guide to Free Flights

First published by Cardsnark Studios 2025

Copyright © 2025 by JJ

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, scanning, or otherwise without written permission from the publisher. It is illegal to copy this book, post it to a website, or distribute it by any other means without permission.

JJ asserts the moral right to be identified as the author of this work.

JJ has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party Internet Websites referred to in this publication and does not guarantee that any content on such Websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

DISCLAIMER

This guide is for educational and informational purposes only.

Credit card offers, terms, and bonuses change frequently. Always read the official terms and conditions before applying for any credit card.

CardSnark is an affiliate marketing website. We may earn commissions when you click our links and apply for cards. This does not affect our recommendations—we only recommend cards we'd tell our friends about.

The information in this guide does not constitute financial advice. Consult with a qualified financial advisor for personalized advice.

— —

IMPORTANT: Pay your credit cards on time and in full every month.

Carrying balances defeats the purpose of rewards programs.

CardSnark.cc – Rewards that actually exist, not marketing fantasies”

First edition

*This book was professionally typeset on Reedsy.
Find out more at reedsy.com*

Contents

| | |
|---|----|
| Introduction | 1 |
| 1 The Welcome Bonus (AKA Free Money for People Who Can Read) | 3 |
| 2 Which Cards Don't Suck (A Comprehen- sive Review) | 6 |
| 3 Spending Bonuses (Or: Strategic Shop- ping Is Not a...) | 9 |
| 4 Point Transfers (The Secret Sauce) | 11 |
| 5 Booking Strategy (Don't Screw This Up) | 14 |
| 6 The Airport Lounge Life (Living Your Best Life) | 16 |
| 7 Common Mistakes That Make You Look Stupid | 18 |
| 8 Advanced Moves (For When You're Ready to Be Insufferable) | 21 |
| 9 Actually Booking the Trip | 23 |
| 10 Keeping the System Working | 25 |
| 11 Conclusion | 27 |
| Epilogue | 29 |
| About the Author | 32 |

Introduction

You've Been Doing It Wrong (Shocking, I Know)

Listen, we need to have a talk. You know that friend who's always posting Instagram stories from Bali, Paris, and Tokyo while you're pretty sure they work the same soul-crushing office job as you? The one whose salary you know can't support this lifestyle because you literally saw their paycheck once? Yeah, they're not trust fund babies, they didn't marry rich, and they're definitely not doing anything illegal (probably).

They've just figured out what the credit card companies really don't want you to know: they'll literally pay you obscene amounts of money to spend money you were going to spend anyway. It's like getting paid to breathe, except the breathing is buying groceries and the payment is a ticket to Rome.

I know, I know. It sounds like a pyramid scheme your cousin Chad would pitch at Thanksgiving after his third beer. "It's not a pyramid, it's a reverse funnel system!" But stick with me here, because by the end of this guide, you're going to be so insufferably smug about your "free" flights that your friends will stop inviting you to things. Worth it.

What You'll Learn:

- How to actually get those sign up bonuses without selling your soul (or just your data, which you were giving away for free anyway)
- Why you've been choosing credit cards like an absolute amateur with a blindfold on
- The art of making airlines compete for your affection like desperate exes
- How to sit in airport lounges eating free cheese and judging people at Gate C38

What You Won't Learn:

- How to commit credit card fraud (I'm not trying to get sued here, thanks)
- Sketchy "hacks" that'll get you banned faster than you can say "terms and conditions"
- Anything that requires a PhD in mathematics or being good at math generally
- How to justify your decisions to your skeptical spouse (you're on your own there)

Let's get started, shall we? Try to keep up.

1

The Welcome Bonus (AKA Free Money for People Who Can Read)

¹

The Most Important Thing You'll Read Today

Credit card welcome bonuses are literally free money. Like, actual free flights handed to you for doing something you were already doing: spending money on groceries, gas, and questionable online shopping at 2 AM.

Here's the deal: Credit card companies will give you 50,000-100,000+ points just for signing up and spending a certain amount in the first few months. That's typically worth $500-$1,000+ in flights. For signing up for a credit card.

Why? Because they're betting you'll carry a balance and pay them interest. Jokes on them—you're going to pay it off every month like a responsible adult. Right? RIGHT?

¹ Cardsnark.cc The Travel Hackers Guide

The Magic Formula

1. Get approved for a travel credit card with a juicy welcome bonus
2. Spend the minimum required amount (usually $3,000-$5,000 in 3 months)
3. Pay it off completely every month (seriously, don't skip this part)
4. Collect your 60,000+ points
5. Book a flight and act surprised when your friends ask how you afforded it

Common Objections from People Who Apparently Enjoy Wasting Money

“But doesn’t this hurt my credit score?”

Oh honey, no. If you pay on time and don’t carry balances, having multiple cards can actually improve your score. But sure, keep believing that one card you got in college with a 19.99% APR and a picture of a puppy on it is serving you well. That’ll definitely get you to Tahiti.

“I don’t spend enough to hit those minimums!”

You’re telling me you spend less than $1,000 a month on nothing? No groceries, no gas, no electric bill, no Netflix subscription, no therapy sessions to deal with how much money you’re wasting? Either you’re living with your parents rent-free or you're lying to yourself. Track your spending for one month. I'll wait. Actually, I won't wait because you'll be back in five minutes, horrified at what you just discovered.

THE WELCOME BONUS (AKA FREE MONEY FOR PEOPLE WHO CAN READ)

"This sounds like too much work"

You're absolutely right. Saving $1,000+ on flights by filling out a five-minute online form and using a different piece of plastic from your wallet is definitely more work than... what, exactly? Picking up extra shifts? Donating plasma? Starting an OnlyFans? Do what you gotta do, but don't come crying to me when I'm in Barcelona and you're in Bakersfield.

* * *

2

Which Cards Don't Suck (A Comprehensive Review)

²

Not all travel credit cards are created equal. Some are genuinely great. Others are basically scams with airline logos slapped on them. Let me break it down for you.

The Heavy Hitters

Premium Travel Cards

These are the cards with annual fees that make you wince. But here's the thing—they actually pay for themselves if you travel more than once a year. Yes, really. I did the math so you don't have to.

What to look for:

² Cardsnark.cc The Travel Hackers Guide

- Welcome bonus of 60,000+ points (anything less is insulting)
- Transfer partners (so you're not stuck with one airline)
- Travel credits that actually offset the annual fee
- Lounge access (because airport food courts are depressing)

Airline-Specific Cards

These can be great if you're married to one airline like some kind of weird monogamous relationship with a corporation. Or if you enjoy limiting your options and paying more because "brand loyalty" sounds better than "I'm scared of change."

The good:

- Free checked bags (saves you money if you're not a minimalist carry-on warrior who wears the same outfit for a week)
- Priority boarding (so you can smugly watch everyone else board while you sit there pretending to read)
- Companion passes (some airlines offer these and they're actually pretty sweet, I'll give them that)

The bad:

- You're locked into one airline like you signed a prenup
- Blackout dates during literally every time you actually want to travel (Christmas? Haha, no. Spring break? In your dreams. Random Tuesday in February? Sure, have at it.)
- Devaluations happen more often than your New Year's resolutions fail

The Strategy

Here's what the pros do: Get a premium flexible travel card for the big welcome bonus and transfer partners. Then maybe add an airline card or two if you fly them often enough. Use the right card for the right purchase. Collect all the points. Feel smug.

THE TRAVEL HACKERS GUIDE TO FREE FLIGHTS

* * *

3

Spending Bonuses (Or: Strategic Shopping Is Not a Personality Flaw)

³

Now that you have the cards, let's talk about maximizing your points on everyday spending. Because getting 1 point per dollar is for quitters.

The Category Game

Different cards give bonus points for different spending categories:

- Dining: 3-4x points (yes, your coffee addiction can fund flights)
- Travel: 3-5x points (book through the right portal, multiply your points)
- Groceries: 2-4x points (everyone eats, might as well profit)
- Gas: 3-4x points (your commute just got slightly less soul-

³ Cardsnark.cc The Travel Hackers Guide crushing)

- Everything else: 1-2x points (better than nothing, I guess)

The Optimal Strategy (For Type-A Personalities)

Keep 3-4 cards and use each one strategically:

- Travel card for flights and hotels
- Dining card for restaurants and bars
- Grocery card for food shopping
- Catch-all card for everything else

Is this overkill? Maybe. Will you get to Paris faster? Absolutely.

For Normal Humans Who Don't Want to Think That Hard

Just get one good flexible travel card and use it for everything. You'll still rack up points faster than using a debit card like some kind of cave person.

* * *

4

Point Transfers (The Secret Sauce)

4

This is where it gets interesting. Most people redeem their points directly through their credit card portal at 1 cent per point. This is fine if you enjoy leaving money on the table.

Smart people transfer their points to airline and hotel partners. Suddenly that 60,000 point welcome bonus isn't a $600 flight—it's a $2,000 business class seat to Europe.

How Point Transfers Work

Your credit card points can transfer to partner airlines and hotels, usually at a 1:1 ratio. Then you book directly through the airline using their points.

⁴ Cardsnark.cc The Travel Hackers Guide

Why this matters:

- International business class: $3,000 cash or 60,000–80,000 points
- Domestic roundtrip: $400 cash or 25,000 points
- The math just mathed in your favor

The Best Transfer Partners

Look for cards that transfer to these airlines:

- For domestic US travel: United, Southwest, JetBlue
- For international: Air France/KLM, British Airways, Singapore Airlines
- For luxury with less pain: ANA, Virgin Atlantic

The Sweet Spots (AKA Absurdly Good Deals)

Every airline program has routes or classes where the points required are stupidly cheap compared to the cash price. These are called “sweet spots” and finding them makes you feel like a genius.

Examples:

POINT TRANSFERS (THE SECRET SAUCE)

- West Coast to Hawaii for 12,500-15,000 points (worth $300-500)
- US to Europe business class for 60,000 points (worth $2,000-4,000)
- Round-the-world tickets that would make your wallet cry

* * *

5

Booking Strategy (Don't Screw This Up)

5

You've got the points. You're ready to book. Congratulations! Now here's how to not waste them.

Rule #1: Be Flexible (Or Be Poor)

The difference between flying on Tuesday vs. Friday can be 25,000 points. That's literally another flight. So unless you absolutely must leave on a specific day, check a few dates.

Rule #2: Book Early (But Not Too Early)

- International flights: 6-10 months out

⁵ Cardsnark.cc The Travel Hackers Guide

- Domestic flights: 2-3 months out
- Last minute: Only if you enjoy pain and disappointment

Award space gets released at predictable times. Learn your airline's schedule. Feel superior.

Rule #3: Be Ready to Pounce

Good award availability disappears faster than free samples at Costco. See a good deal? Book it. You can usually cancel or change later. Decision paralysis costs points.

What to Avoid

- Holiday travel using points: Everyone has the same idea. You'll pay 2-3x the normal points.
- Booking through third parties: Use the airline directly. Thank me later.
- Assuming all points are equal: 50,000 Airline A points ≠ 50,000 Airline B points. Value varies wildly.

* * *

6

The Airport Lounge Life (Living Your Best Life)

6

Remember when I mentioned lounge access? Let's talk about why this matters more than you think.

What's Actually in These Lounges?

- Free food and drinks (including alcohol, you lush)
- Comfortable seating (shocking concept, I know)
- Fast WiFi (faster than the airport's garbage connection)
- Clean bathrooms (underrated)
- Shower facilities (some locations)
- A sense of superiority (priceless)

⁶ Cardsnark.cc The Travel Hackers Guide

How to Get In

Several ways to access lounges:

1. Premium credit card (Priority Pass, Centurion Lounges, etc.)
2. Airline status (fly enough and they let you in)
3. Day passes (like paying for expensive snacks with extra steps)
4. Business/First class ticket (well obviously)

The right credit card gives you lounge access plus guest privileges. Bring your jealous friends. Rub it in.

* * *

7

Common Mistakes That Make You Look Stupid

7

Let's talk about what NOT to do, because apparently some people need this spelled out.

Paying Interest to "Earn More Points"

No. Absolutely not. Never. If you're carrying a balance to earn points, you're doing it catastrophically wrong. The interest you pay will dwarf any points earned. Just... don't.

Spending Money You Don't Have

Credit cards are not free money. They're a tool. If you can't afford something with cash, you can't afford it with credit. Revolutionary concept, I know.

Closing Cards Too Quickly

Annual fee coming up? Sure, close it or downgrade. But closing cards right after getting the bonus makes you look suspicious and might get you blacklisted. Keep them at least a year.

Ignoring the Annual Fee Math

A $550 annual fee sounds scary until you realize the card gives you $300 in travel credits, lounge access worth $200+, and the welcome bonus alone covers multiple years. Do the actual math before having a panic attack.

Not Having a Plan

Collecting points with no redemption strategy is called hoarding. You're not a dragon. Make a plan. Book the trip. Actually use the points before they devalue.

THE TRAVEL HACKERS GUIDE TO FREE FLIGHTS

* * *

8

Advanced Moves (For When You're Ready to Be Insufferable)

8

Okay, you've mastered the basics. Now let's get weird.

The Companion Pass Play

Some airlines offer companion passes where someone flies free with you. Get this and suddenly you're booking two flights for the price (points) of one. Your partner/friend/dog will love you.

⁸ Cardsnark.cc The Travel Hackers Guide

Status Matches and Challenges

Already have status with one airline? Other airlines might match it just for asking. Literally free elite status. Why not?

Manufactured Spending

This is where you get creative about meeting minimum spends without actually “spending” money. Buying refundable things, paying taxes with credit cards, gift card strategies, etc.

Warning: This is advanced. Don’t try this until you know what you’re doing. And maybe not even then.

The Card Application Strategy

There are optimal times to apply for cards, optimal orders, and strategies to maximize approvals. This gets into the weeds fast. But if you want to get serious, research “5/24 rules,” “Chase trifecta,” and “Amex pop-up jail.”

Or don’t. Even basic travel hacking gets you free flights.

* * *

9

Actually Booking the Trip

9

You've got the points. You know the strategies. Now let's book this thing.

The Search Process

1. Decide where you want to go (shocking first step)
2. Check award availability on airline websites
3. Compare point costs across different programs
4. Book the best value (lowest points for your desired flight)
5. Feel smug (mandatory final step)

⁹ Cardsnark.cc The Travel Hackers Guide

Useful Tools

- Award search engines: Find availability across multiple airlines
- Point valuations: See what your points are actually worth
- Route maps: Figure out which airlines fly where
- Award calendars: See the whole month's availability at once

When to Pay Cash Instead

Sometimes paying cash actually makes more sense:

- Super cheap domestic flights ($100 or less)
- When points required are stupidly high
- When you want to earn more points for future trips
- When cash prices are at error fare levels

Points are valuable, but they're not magic. Do the math.

* * *

10

Keeping the System Working

10

Congrats! You've booked a flight using points. You're officially a travel hacker. Now let's keep this gravy train rolling.

Maintaining Your Cards

- Pay on time, every time (seriously)
- Use each card occasionally (or they'll close them)
- Monitor your points (don't let them expire)
- Track annual fees (cancel or downgrade if not worth it)

¹⁰ Cardsnark.cc The Travel Hackers Guide

The Annual Review

Once a year, audit your cards:

- Still getting value from the annual fee?
- Better cards available now?
- Time to apply for new ones?
- Points about to expire?

Staying Informed

Programs change constantly. Airlines devalue points. Cards add new bonuses. Stay updated through:

- Travel hacking blogs (yes, this is a whole industry)
- Credit card news sites
- Online communities (Reddit has several)
- Airline program updates

Or just wing it. You'll probably be fine.

* * *

11

Conclusion

Go Forth and Fly Free(ish)

Look, you made it to the end. That's more than most people do, so congratulations on having an attention span.

Here's the bottom line: Travel hacking isn't complicated. It's not shady. It's not too good to be true. It's just... arbitrage. Credit card companies want customers. They're willing to pay for them. You're taking them up on their offer.

Your Next Steps:

1. Check your credit score (needs to be decent, sorry)
2. Research 2-3 cards with good welcome bonuses
3. Apply for one (don't go crazy applying for 5 at once)

4. Hit the minimum spend (without buying stupid stuff)
5. Collect your points
6. Book a flight
7. Post Instagram stories from somewhere exotic
8. Watch your friends ask “how did you afford this?”
9. Send them this guide
10. Feel superior

The difference between you and those people living their best travel lives? They just started. That's it. They're not richer or smarter. They just decided that paying $1,000 for a flight when they could pay $50 in fees instead was silly.

So stop overthinking it. Get a card. Book a trip. Thank me later.

Now if you'll excuse me, I have a business class flight to catch that cost me exactly 70,000 points and a smug sense of satisfaction.

Epilogue

Bonus: Quick Reference Guide

Best Cards for Beginners

- Look for no/low annual fee first year
- Minimum 50,000 point welcome bonus
- Good everyday earning rates
- Flexible transfer partners

Red Flags to Avoid

- Cards with huge annual fees and weak benefits
- Airline cards with limited transfer options
- “Invitation only” cards marketed as exclusive (they’re not)
- Cards that make you jump through hoops for the bonus

The Annual Fee Math

Annual Fee: $550

- Travel Credit: -$300+
- Lounge Access Value: -$200+
- Other Perks: -$100+
- = Effective Cost: Break-even or better

Point Valuations (Rough Average)

- Airline miles: 1.5–2 cents per point
- Flexible travel points: 1.5–2 cents per point
- Hotel points: 0.5–1 cent per point
- Cash back: 1 cent per point (obviously)

When to Book

- Domestic: 6–8 weeks out
- International: 6–10 months out
- Peak season: Book as early as possible
- Off-peak: You've got more flexibility

Final Thought:

Travel hacking isn't about gaming the system. It's about using the system the way it was designed—but actually reading the instructions instead of just winging it like you do with IKEA furniture.

Now stop reading and start booking. Those flights aren't going to earn themselves.

Disclaimer: Pay your credit cards on time. Don't spend money you don't have. I'm not responsible for your poor financial decisions. But I'll absolutely take credit when you're sipping champagne in business class.

About the Author

Meet the guy behind CardSnark

Fitness trainer-turned-points hoarder who got sick of watching airlines, banks, and loyalty programs move the goalposts while lecturing the rest of us about “responsible spending.” Instead of clapping along, he built systems to flip the script—stacking welcome bonuses, transfer partners, and promos so normal people can turn everyday purchases into free flights without selling a kidney or their sanity.

He’s not here to moralize your latte or sell you thirty cards you don’t need. He’s here to help you beat loyalty math with clear rules, ruthless prioritization, and a healthy disrespect for “dynamic pricing.” This guide is the manual he wishes someone handed him years ago—practical, blunt, and optimized for people with a job, a life, and exactly zero patience for corporate theater. Pack a carry-on, set your alarms for fare drops, and prepare to make the system pay for your vacation for once.

You can connect with me on:

- ⌚ <https://cardsnark.cc>
- 🐦 <https://x.com/cardsnarking>
- 👤 <https://facebook.com/cardsnark>

Subscribe to my newsletter:

- ✉️ <https://magic.beehiiv.com/v1/4c9578b8-c72b-41d3-aa5d-5094b2f56335?email=%7B%7Bemail%7D%7D>

